SYNOPSIS OF SOCIOLOGY AS A DISCIPLINE

Sociology was the first academic discipline where the founders where both Black and White – Male and Female [?]

Auguste Comte [Isidore-Auguste-Marie-François-Xavier Comte, (born January 19, 1798, Montpellier, France—died September 5, 1857, Paris)] was a French philosopher who founded sociology[?] \rightarrow first used the term "sociology" in 1838 to refer to the scientific study of society \rightarrow He believed that all societies develop and progress through the following stages: religious, metaphysical, and scientific.

He believed in Positivism as a theory & methodology → Positivism as a theoretic model it champions the idea that only scientific truth is the real truth → Positivism as a methodological practice involves the search for "invariant laws of the natural and social world."

Auguste Comte's work influenced and laid the foundations for the other major theorists widely considered to be the founders of "sociology"→ attempts to remain scientific, systematic, and objective rather than purely normative or subjective.

The Founders of Sociology Advanced Our Understanding of Social Life:

Marx [labour], Weber [economy], Durkheim [social problems] Simmel [urban life] W. E. B. Du Bois [race relations] → Harriet Martineau [gender relations]

Harriet Martineau[?] (/ˈmɑːrtənˌoʊ/; 12 June 1802 – 27 June 1876) was a British social theorist and Whig writer, often cited as the first female sociologist → Martineau wrote many books and a multitude of essays from a sociological, holistic, religious, domestic, and perhaps most controversially, feminine perspective; she also translated various works by Auguste Comte.
