

Maple flowers

A close-up photograph of a maple branch. The branch is covered with large, lobed leaves that are a pale yellowish-green color, indicating they are young. From the branch hangs a cluster of small, green, fuzzy flowers. The flowers are arranged in a loose, downward-pointing cluster. The background is a soft-focus view of other maple branches and leaves, suggesting a natural outdoor setting.

Plant Biology
SC/BIOL 2010

GO green