

Accessed on March 15, 2012 from website, http://yfile.news.yorku.ca/2012/03/12/fil-can-youths-not-doing-as-well-as-parents/?utm_source=YFile_Email&utm_medium=email&utm_campaign=MorningEmail

12.03.2012 in York in the Media A button with the word "SHARE" in a sans-serif font, preceded by a small red square icon with a white plus sign. To the right of the button are icons for Facebook, Twitter, and an email icon.

Fil-Can youths not doing as well as parents

Filipino youth are not doing as well as their parents' generation when it comes to education and employment levels, said a panel of speakers at Toronto's Metropolis Conference on Friday, reported The Philippine Reporter March 9. "If you look at the Filipino community, it's the one group where you see a downward movement from a very high level in the first generation to a lower level of degree ownership in the second generation," said Professor Philip Kelly of the York Centre for Asian Research and the Faculty of Liberal Arts & Professional Studies, to the group of about 20 people who attended a workshop. Kelly was presenting the work of the "Filipino Youth Transitions in Canada" (FYTiC) research project, a collaboration between York University and the Community Alliance for Social Justice (CASJ). Read full story.