DISTINCTIVE APPROACH

We are committed to improving health, including but not limited to the treatment and prevention of injury and disease. We regard health as both a desirable state as well as a fundamental resource

We understand that health is determined and influenced by a complex interaction of biological, genetic, social, economic, cultural, political developmental behavioural and environmental factors which may vary across the lifespan, populations, and other contexts. We understand that health care on its own cannot protect, restore, and improve health.

Our transformative approach to health and wellness recognizes the importance of high quality research in a wide variety of stages, methods, and approaches designed to improve health care, health equity, and the broader determinants of health. We embrace systems thinking and health promotion tools to enable individuals, communities, and populations to develop and benefit from policy, strategic design, community action, human connections, organizational collaboration, integrated and effective services, treatments and management, as well as empowering education, to inform decision making. We have particular strength in neuroscience; mental health, illness and addiction; healthy social relationships and development; global health; healthy aging and the dignified care of older adults; muscular-skeletal injuries and conditions; the identification, treatment and prevention of chronic diseases and conditions; effective health and healthcare policy and management; healthy equity; psycho-social-cultural aspects of sport; as well as human nutrition.
