When our community was impacted by COVID-19, we faced unprecedented challenges—and met them, head on.

COVID-19 stretched the social services sector to its limits, pushing some of our most vulnerable friends and neighbours even further into crisis.
Because of this crisis:

- Food bank demand has skyrocketed
  From April 1-8, 211 referred 2,700 people to local food banks.

- Mental health calls have increased 211 experienced a 90% increase in calls to mental health support agencies in one weekend.

- Domestic violence reports have soared
  Rates of gender-based violence increased by 20-30% in some parts of the country.
Thanks to your support, our agencies:

- Delivered 3,000+ meals each week to people experiencing homelessness and street-involved residents.
- Launched a centralized hub for seniors to access support remotely, including establishing a centralized intake hotline.
- Created a new isolation site for emergency housing that allowed residents to maintain a safe two-metre social distance.
Your generosity made a real difference in people’s lives. You helped:

- Parents working part-time jobs make ends meet.
- Friends who struggle with depression and anxiety access remote mental health resources.
- Elderly family members continue to get visits from personal support workers.
Provides flexible funding to community services so they can respond quickly to emerging needs.
