

Nancy Johnson
Bio

I am a veteran grant writer with over 35 years' experience working with researchers across the social sciences, humanities, health social sciences, arts, law, and education at several universities: York, McMaster, Guelph, McGill, Carleton, and UoT. As a professional grant writer, I complement the support offered by research offices and faculty research facilitators by providing one-to-one project development advice and guidance with the writing process itself. I do not write for faculty. Instead, I provide 'eyes on the text' writing mentorship. I'm seeking to work with up to four York emerging/early career scholars this summer who are eager to learn how grant writing differs from other forms of academic writing, what assessors are looking for, and most importantly how to present a clear, compelling, cohesive, and concise narrative that communicates why your research should be funded.