It feels like Summer is here!

Conference season is upon us and maybe some of you were at Congress or attending other spaces? If you attend sessions related to teaching and learning you might want to capture that information for your teaching dossier. This includes the Supporting Teaching at York (STAY) symposium and the Teaching in Focus (TiF) conference--so don't forget to mark this down in the evidence of Professional Development section of your dossier.

The information about the STAY Symposium is available online, so you can check out the program and see what your colleagues have been up to. Also, if you want to contribute and be part of programming for next year you can see what is taking place. The programming was great, food was good, and the hallway conversations and catch-ups just the best.

Of course, there are all kinds of other programming happening throughout the year. For example, this past year the courses How do you know learning happens? and How do you know teaching happens? took place in different modalities and formats: face-to-face, virtual, across a semester and intensive. If you might be interested in these courses make sure you add your name to our waitlist, click on the hyperlinks above so we can keep you informed.

The co-instructors Natasha, Matthew, and Lianne are looking forward to reflecting on the changes we made to the courses and the formats to see what seemed to work well for graduate students.

Wishing you all the best for the summer.
