

Hi, it's me again, Matthew Dunleavy, educational developer at the Teaching Commons. In the blog today you're going to see details of another one of our certificates, the certificate in experiencing educational development in higher education. This is an experiential inquiry based collaborative year-long course. We work with peers and one of our wonderful Teaching Commons Tutors to delve into educational development and the work that we do. This culminates at the end of the academic year with the STAY Symposium that is the Supporting Teaching at York Symposium that looks a little different each year depending on the cohort and where we were we sure we're generative and we celebrate teaching and learning here at York University. I hope you'll join us.
